

I am writing to express my concern regarding Broadband Over Power Lines. I realize that the intent might be to provide broadband internet access to households that might not otherwise have the opportunity to use this service. However, I would prefer that the FCC does not grant premission for access providers to use BPL. I don't feel comfortable that adequate safeguards will be taken to ensure that radio pollution does not occur, and feel that once this is in place it will be nearly impossible to take out of service should the amount of radiation being leaked by BPL providers prove excessive.

Please consider other alternatives to BPL.
